The Global Commission on Drug Policy has constantly called for the removal of the legal or defacto barriers to harm reduction services, and the implementation of the package of comprehensive interventions developed and recommended by the WHO, UNODC and UNAIDS. Moreover, this package has been strengthened by WHO's consolidated guidelines for key populations, in particular underlining the need to address structural barriers in order to implement effective and accessible programmes. Now that the UNGASS is approaching, it is time to reevaluate the commitment of a horizontal UN approach to the world drug problem and harm reduction.

This session will aim at discussing the role of the international community and the UN agencies in scaling-up harm reduction services and taking advantage of the UNGASS to discuss the social, economic, medical and development benefits of harm reduction and of a whole UN comprehensive approach to drugs.
